

Solicitors offer hope to Malvern Workers

Attwood Solicitors have represented hundreds of clients with hearing loss claims across the UK, and compensation payouts range from £1,000 - £12,000.

Having had considerable success throughout the UK, in pursuing compensation claims for workers who have been exposed to excessive levels of noise at work, Attwood Solicitors are now looking to assist workers and former workers in the Malvern area.

Anyone who has worked in heavy industry, particularly the car manufacturing and engineering industry, are encouraged to contact Attwood Solicitors in order to undergo a free hearing test and receive free legal advice in order to determine whether they may have suffered industrial deafness, known as noise induced hearing loss.

Whilst people's hearing generally deteriorates with age, those that have been exposed to excessive levels of noise at work, may well find that the level of their hearing deterioration is greater than that were they not exposed to the levels of noise.

Attwood Solicitors explain that compensation can be sought for workers and former workers of the industry even if they were last exposed to the noisy conditions as far back as 1963.

Attwood Solicitors further explain that "employees may wrongly believe it is too late to claim compensation. People perhaps don't realise that even if the damage was caused many years ago they still may be entitled to get help and compensation.

We are not simply seeking compensation, we are working to give the client the help they deserve and need to put their life back on track".

Noise above 80 decibels, roughly the same as an average alarm clock, is considered dangerous, but many older people are now suffering from damage caused before current health and safety standards were introduced.

Attwood Solicitors have represented hundreds of clients with hearing loss claims across the UK, and compensation payouts range from £1,000 - £12,000.
